Video/Sound Converter 9.6.926...Q: Passing a Ruby argument to a Bash script Using ruby-sysprep I am trying to pass an argument to a bash script as follows: ruby -e

"SysPrep.sysprep("daemon:run $sysprep_daemon")"

 it is however not working, the sysprep daemon has an output like this: run Usage: daemon [OPTIONS] [ARGS] options: -h, --help Show this help. -V, --version Show program version. --daemon-pid=PID PID of daemon to start --daemon-command=COMMAND Executes COMMAND with daemon Where should I put my arguments and how can I pass them as arguments? A: Ruby does not have a shell, and therefore cannot pass arguments to bash (as in the example you gave). If you need to run daemon with a specific set of arguments, you can create a wrapper script that calls daemon, and pass the arguments in from the Ruby script as parameters. Something like this:

#!/usr/bin/env ruby # vim: set expandtab: require 'pathname' puts "-- daemon start command\n#{ARGV.join(' ')}" daemon = ARGV.join(' ') File.open("/etc/daemon.cfg", "w") do |io| io.write\ndaemon end # Start daemon daemon Save that to a file (e.g. start_daemon.rb), and run the\nscript like this: ruby start_daemon.rb daemon:run /path/to/daemon (you'll need to change the\npath to /etc/da
