If you like watercolors, you should have a look at what is out there and see what works for you. Keep in mind that everything comes with a learning curve. Watercolors are similar to painting on paper. You can use pastels or watercolor paper. I'm happy with either of these options. Watercolors are also similar to painting on canvas, in that you can use thicker paint to build up layers of color or you can use thinner colors, which is more limited in your options. Some options for getting started are the Canson Watercolor Starter Kit (available at the major art supply retailers) or the Arches Watercolor Palette. These have been my go-to-watercolors, and they hold up well. The watercolors come in different sizes, and there are lots of colors to pick from. Just play around with a few. I learned my lesson of trying to paint in several styles at one time and to keep it clean and simple. Now I have too much watercolor painted on each piece I work on. Watercolors are non-toxic, so you are safe to use them on all your work. They are inexpensive, there are no mess, and they are small and light. You can add everything from washes to oils to printmaking. I think it is best to start with something simple. Watercolors can be used on their own or in a combo of watercolors and oil or acrylics. I have a large palette that I buy a few of these at a time, so that I can have them on hand for painting, adding to a canvas, paper, etc. Q: Testing nested React components with Jest and Enzyme I'm building a React app with Jest and Enzyme and using jest. 3da54e8ca3
