With all that said, I will happily tell you I had a great time with the demo and that I will be picking the game up as soon as EA is willing to release it in my region (as long as it supports my Elite and Ultimate seasons, which it doesn't right now). As for the gameplay, I'd have to say the concept in both Jürgen and Julian's are quite similar. You have all the usual suspects: Passes, Seleccion, Scrabbles, Throws, Interceptions, Fouls, Corner Kicks, Tackles, Players Coming Back into Play, and Dribbling. The most significant change this year is the player AI. This year, players will be smarter and more intelligent. One thing I really liked is that you can tell from looking at the player's stats that they are "close" to performing a move or hitting a pass in a certain position. FIFA '13 was difficult in that you had to counter-balance defensive strategies by making sure you filled the right spots with attacking skills. This year, FIFA for the first time will give you an idea of how a player should be used in specific scenarios. For example, one player might be good at crossing the ball with a semi-blind-defend but won't be used in the Open Play thanks to his agility. Below you'll find my own observations (in a spoiler free way) and some of my favorite moments from the demo. I'm not saying I hate to play Jürgen - in fact I loved his gameplay - but rather the fact that he was almost too good and I found myself "take my money" on him for a moment. The same goes for Julian. I'm not as invested in the World Cup as I am in the Champions League and finding players that aren't "as good" as the best players is simply more difficult when you can find world-class talent in many positions. The game will be a bit slow on its first 20-25 matches. It will be that way for all games, but especially when it's your first match. Here's what I saw from the get go: As I mentioned earlier, FIFA for the first time will give you an idea of how to utilize each player. For example, you will notice that the more prominent players at the top won't be
