I am currently using git commit -am "1" which I want to be converted into a shell script that will first check if the sender is me and only then send an email containing the details of the commit (the output of above command). Any suggestions how to get started? EDIT: The git commit output contains the commit details (email address, subject etc. which I can pipe to mail or save as a file and then send, but I would like to use the output to send an email with the commit details. A: git commit -am"1" 2>&1 | #1 is the first stream #2 is the second stream (let it be stderr) read #read the output If you want to start and read the output of git with the comman you can do the following (reademail contentname; eval echo ${contentname}_${contentname##*"_"}@email.com "test message" #check if name is "justme@example.com") | sendmail -t -s"test message" #send mail Using MAb 17-1A in the development of a MAb-based diagnostic antigen test for Aspergillus species.
