a participant's health and fitness, which might be better enhanced by higher doses of the supplements [1]. Second, it is well-known that healthy individuals are less susceptible to develop cardiovascular diseases [2]. Individuals with obesity or T2DM are at a higher risk of developing cardiovascular diseases [3]. Currently, there is no clear evidence that atherosclerosis is ameliorated by anthocyanins or any other antioxidants in human subjects. In conclusion, our results indicated that OS might be involved in the pathogenesis of obesity and T2DM, and that anthocyanins may represent a promising therapeutic target for the treatment of T2DM and obesity. While extensive future studies are still required to fully elucidate the effects of anthocyanins in animals and humans, it is tempting to speculate that the prophylactic and therapeutic use of anthocyanins could offer a useful strategy to prevent or delay the development of diabetes and obesity. Q: How to add multiple values to a class type in c#? I want to pass an array of strings to a method that will be passed to another method in my c# class. The method will receive an array of classtype. This is what I want to do: public void Main() { Class myClass = new Class(); string[] userNames = new string[] { "Joe", "Tad" }; Class myClass = new Class(userNames); } I need Class to be a class type that holds an array of strings, so it should be able to hold multiple values. A: That Class should look like public class Class { public Class(params object[] items) { // do stuff with the items. } } Inside Main, you could call it like Class myClass = new Class(new string[] { "Joe", "Tad" }); and inside the Class constructor you could do var items = new object[] { "joe", "Tad" }; myClass.DoSomething(items); Of course, you need to decide for yourself how to do "stuff with the items". Prevalence of HIV infection and cost-effectiveness measured in terms of the incremental cost-effectiveness ratio (ICER). The PM-HTC model was the least costly HTC service (US dollars 215.69 [A$352.04]); the comparison with nurse-managed HTC resulted in a dominant ICER (ie, net monetary benefit from PM-HTC
