However, I find coding much slower than using an IDE like eclipse or vim. Is there a way to improve my Emacs experience? A: The first problem I find is that some keyboard shortcuts (for exiting modes, for example) are much slower than with other editors. I don't think you can do much to improve your experience for this - my first advice is to try each editor to see which fits you best. Second, and this one is very subjective: you can improve your performance (faster, less mistakes, fewer lines of code) by applying practice of refactoring ("the art of changing things"). While many people swear by using a text editor with good refactoring support, it is possible to write your own (or at least part of it), I found this incredible 6d1f23a050
