Q: What is the right way to refer to the current position of an element in React Native? In React Native, doesn't use refs to identify which text to render. Instead, the default tag with a ref for each child renders the text, which means that the current position of the text must be calculated in every render. In the following example, the color of the text in red should change when the number of sentences is 5 and when is 10. `import React from 'react'; export default class App extends React.Component { constructor(props) { super(props); this.state = { textCount: 0; }; } _renderText = () => { return ({this.state.textCount > 5? {this.state.textCount} : {this.state.textCount} }); }; render() { return ({this._renderText()}); } } A: You can use hooks. See ... const [text, setText] = useState(0) const increment = () => setText(text + 1) const decrement = () => setText`
