it is typically recommended that anyone who is going to install an os on a sonicwall router set up zones accordingly. on a sonicwall, it is recommended that the following zones be enabled and properly configured to prevent outside access to your network: dmz: a dmz is a separated physical network with a unique ip address that lies in a separate virtual ip subnet. you can also use it as a zone and separate other networks. internal network: this zone is typically where all of your lan (local area network) devices reside. typically, in order to restrict access via ssh and other such programs, a sonicwall router network administrator will enable these specific rules via boxcentral.com . once this is enabled, it will allow you to restrict access to specific ports via the gateway-ip (sonicwall), the public ip, as well as the ip address of the machine that you are attempting to log into. this will ensure that all communication can be tracked with the assistance of the firewall. determine zone securitythe sonicwall series of routers is comprised of a variety of zones that are used to segment physical and virtual devices in a network environment, such as dmz, internal networks, and external networks. zones on a sonicwall router can provide boundary control by allowing or denying the traffic to traverse outside of a particular zone. sonicwall customer supportthis leads us to the next tutorial, the sonicwall customer support. for sonicwall users who are experiencing ssl interception, or communications, not only on their network, but through their sonicwall router, they will be unable to access to the sonicwall customer support section as they will be unable to log in. typically, sonicwall router customers will have to enable the dpi-ssl inspection section and dial into the sonicwall router directly.
